

cinematical

INDIE

The (Mostly) Indie Film Calendar: Fests Aplenty, and Hippies. So Many Hippies.

Posted Sep 14th 2007 12:31PM by Eric D. Snider

Filed under: Independent, Fandom, Exhibition, Other Festivals, Cinematical Indie, The \(Mostly\) Indie Film Calendar

After a brief hiatus, The (Mostly) Indie Film Calendar is back, offering a round-up of what's happening beyond the multiplexes all across America. If you know of something indie-related happening near you -- a local festival, a series of classic restored films, lectures, workshops, etc. -- send the info to me at Eric.Snider\(at\)weblogsinc\(dot\)comweblogsinc(dot)com) and I'll add it to the list.

First, a few indie films are opening today in select cities (mostly L.A. and New York). Here's the scoop on them:

Moving McAllister is noteworthy for featuring Jon Heder, who played a supporting role as a favor to an old college buddy. That buddy, Ben Gourley, wrote the screenplay and stars as an uptight law intern who kisses up to his boss by helping his niece (Mila Kunis) drive cross-country. Heder plays a hippie they collect along the way. Wacky road-trip hijinks ensue. (L.A., New York, Minneapolis, Salt Lake City.)

Take a step outside the mainstream.

cinematical

INDIE